Introduction:-In ancient Indian tradition, knowledge was supposed to facilitate both spiritual liberation and perfection in worldly skills for earning a livelihood. During the Vedic period our education system was based on Shrutis and Smritis and imparted orally but since 6th century B.C. socio-economic landscape changed rapidly leading to the emergence of Mahajanpadas on the one hand and several heretical sects on the other. With this rapid change in society, the method of education also underwent a great change. Now onwards Buddhist Sangha and later on the Buddhist monastery emerged as the prime centres of learning. With time, some developed into true Universities such as Taxila, Nalanda and Vikramshila.

History of Vikramshila University:- The Vikramshila University came into being and was founded by King Dharmapala of Pala dynasty. The king granted land endorsement for its upkeep. Other Pala rulers also continued the patronage to the institution Vikramshila developed as an important and exclusive centre of a new sect. Thus under the continued enthusiastic patronage of the Pala rulers and the emerging centre of the new form of learning within Buddhism, Vikramshila attracted many scholars and students and it soon outshined the Nalanda University and established itself as the premier centre of higher learning in India during the early medieval period. It remained in the leading position till it was destroyed by BakhtiyarKhilji.

The buildings at Vikramshila were well planned and accommodative. There were one hundred and eight temples and six college buildings, spread-out like Lotus petals, with beautiful Mahabodhi temple in the centre. This was also a residential University. The monastery has a total of 208 cells, 52 on each side, for students as well as teachers. Like the other Universities, this University also provided specialized instruction in various subjects. Buddhist textbooks belonging to both branches of Buddhism- Mahayanism and Hinyanism were taught. Along with these, all the important branches of Hindu learning were also taught and a special significance was attached to the study of Tantras. The University had developed literacy and cultural contacts with Tibet. Scholars from Tibet were particularly interested in the Tantras, for the teaching of which special arrangements were made at the University throughout the four hundred years of its existence. Its special contribution was the propagations of Buddhism in Tibet, Pegu and Ceylon.

To ensure a high standard of learning students were admitted to the University only if they satisfied the test given by eminent authorities in the change of various subjects. Tibetan sources chronicle that at one time, there were six eminent logicians posted for the work. Ratnakarasanti was placed at the east gate, Vagisvarakirti at the west, Naropa at the north, Prajnakaramati at the south, Ratnavajra at the first central gate and Jnana Srimitra at the second gate.

As the leading learning centre of the period, Vikramshila University attracted many scholars from other parts of India as well as from other countries. It has been mentioned that in the twelfth century 3,000 monk scholars were studying at this university. Acharya Buddha Jnanapada was the founder of the new cult, Vajrayanism, of which Vikramshila was the centre of those days. He was appointed first as the priest of King Dharmapala (774-806 AD) and later as the Acharya for ordination at Vikramshila. VairocharaRakshita, Jetari, Prajnakaramati, Ratnakarasanti, Jnana Sri, and Dharmakirtietc. were important scholars attached with the Vikramshila University.
